

The Little Engine that Could Did

It's time for The National Museum of Transportation to purchase a new miniature train engine. Our current engine brought joy to hundreds of thousands of friends over the past 15 years and now it needs to rest. Hop aboard and help us purchase a replica of The Jupiter.

WHY A JUPITER REPLICA? THE JUPITER MADE HISTORY!

The Jupiter helped change American history. The Jupiter was a steam locomotive owned by the Central Pacific Railroad. It made history when it joined the Union Pacific No. 119 at Promontory Summit, Utah, during the Golden Spike ceremony commemorating the completion of the First Transcontinental Railroad in May 10, 1869. Our miniature train engineers would love to share this history with passengers on our Jupiter replica for the next decade or more. Please help us!
